

AVOIDING PLAGIARISM IN PRESENTATIONS

While speaking and presenting to an audience, it is important to reference where you obtained your information, whether it is a quote, paraphrased idea, table, picture, or figure.

Always remember to be cautious of plagiarism. If you are unsure what plagiarism is, check out our general guide to avoiding plagiarism!

CITING IN A VISUAL PRESENTATION

As you would in a paper, you need to cite your sources both in-text and at the end of your presentation in a list of sources.

- Quotes and paraphrases: Accompany with an in-text citation or footnote that is compliant with your course's style manual (MLA, APA, Turabian, etc). Footnotes should be placed at the bottom left corner of the slide.
- Inspired by a source: Include an in-text citation at the bottom left corner of your slide to give credit to the original scholar. Do this as well if you have a series of bullet points that are all paraphrased from a single source.
- References: Include a slide(s) at the end of your presentation that provides the full publication information based on your style manual's guidelines.

CITING WHILE SPEAKING

When giving a speech without a visual aid like a PowerPoint, citing your sources isn't quite as straightforward. Integrate information about the authors you are citing into your speech:

1. Paraphrases: Introduce the author before your explanation of their concept. For example:
 - a. A prominent scholar in the study of the Ancient Near East cosmology, Kyle Greenwood, argued that the Israelites' cosmology differed from many neighboring cultures due to their monotheistic worldview.
2. Quotes: Use signal phrases like "quote" and "end quote" to emphasize where the author's exact words begin and end. For example:
 - a. Jones stated, quote, "It is always important to carefully cite in your presentations," end quote.
3. Inspired by: Offer to provide the audience with further information afterwards. In addition, if you are giving a speech for a class, you likely will need to submit a list of sources in accordance with your recommended style guide.

PRACTICE NOW